Environmental Memories of South Central Phoenix
Sept. 6 – Dec. 7, 2012
George Washington Carver Museum and Cultural Center

Environmental Memories of South Central Phoenix

Opening Reception: Sept. 6, 5:30 p.m.
Free and open to the public
Refreshments served; children welcome

September 6 – December 7, 2012
Museum hours: Monday–Friday, 12–5 p.m.
Admission by donation
Tours by appointment 602.254.7516

La exhibición estará disponible en Inglés tanto como en Español.

George Washington Carver Museum and Cultural Center
415 East Grant Street, Phoenix, AZ 85004
info@carvermuseum.com
azcmcc.org

Once upon a time, the Salt River flowed through Southern Phoenix. Canals lined with shady cottonwood trees carried water to farms. Families picnicked on the riverbank, caught fish and swam in the refreshing water. These and other memories of South Central Phoenix from the late 1800s to the present are displayed in a new exhibit at the George Washington Carver Museum and Cultural Center.

Local stories, photographs, timelines and scientific research on urban environmental change provide fascinating insights into some of Phoenix’s oldest neighborhoods. From farming to industrial manufacturing to neighborhood revitalization, visitors will learn about environmental and social changes and what they mean for the people who call those neighborhoods home.

Join us as we consider lessons from the past. Add your voice to the conversation about improving urban neighborhoods and preparing for future challenges.

Photo courtesy of Frank Barrios

This exhibit is based on work supported by the National Science Foundation under Grant Numbers GEO-0816168 Urban Vulnerability to Climate Change and DGE-0504248 IGERT in Urban Ecology.