Jessica Barlow
Professor, School of Speech, Language, and Hearing Sciences
San Diego State University

Barlow directs the Sage Project within the Center for Regional Sustainability. She serves on the University’s sustainability committee, climate-action planning council, and on projects that incorporate sustainability into the curriculum.

The Sage Project is based on a model campus-community partnership being replicated nationwide. It is a radically simple way to engage large numbers of students with real-world projects that address the community’s pressing social, economic, and environmental challenges.

In this talk, Barlow will describe the projects and the resulting benefits for students, faculty members, the University, and the larger community.
